

Rialto Theater Center
228 East Fourth Street
Loveland, Colorado 80537

Ninety years of history awaits you at the historic Rialto Theater. From its beginnings as a silent movie theater to its current status as the premiere performing arts venue in Loveland, the excitement of show time and the tantalizing aroma of popcorn have been a part of the theater on an almost nightly basis for almost a century.

Early Art History

In 1984, Loveland was transformed into an arts community when a group of like-minded individuals banded together to host an outdoor sculpture show. This modest goal grew into a thriving non-profit organization, the Loveland High Plains Arts Council, which hosts the annual event, Sculpture in the Park.

Eight years later, the Loveland Sculpture Group was formed to establish an additional sculpture showcase for artists. Both organizations work cooperatively with the City of Loveland to host two of the largest outdoor sculpture exhibitions in North America: Sculpture in the Park and the Loveland Sculpture Invitational.

In 1985, Loveland made a profound commitment to the arts by becoming the first Colorado city to pass an Art in Public Places Ordinance. A nine-member citizens' committee, the Visual Arts Commission, oversees the City's art acquisitions, donations and placements. Since 1985, several strong, successful public/private partnerships have been established.

The City's collection presently encompasses over three hundred diverse works of art valued at approximately $7.6 million dollars. Private contributions by arts organizations, citizens and artists, have donated over 72% of the value of the collection, making the City of Loveland unique among other municipalities.
